The Hill Article - Not a “psychological” source, but political parties ARE groups

Who: GOP(Republican) voters

What: An overwhelming selection of a single candidate - I only bring it up because groups' definitionally have some degree of cohesiveness of ideology(something that political parties in the modern era have taken to the extreme)

Where: The United States of America

When: “Now”, but more generally in the primary period running up to the 2024 election.

How: Donald Trump has manipulated the group “mechanics” of the Republican party such that it is entirely focused on him, both as a manner of political opportunism and to ensure personal loyalty (cough January 6 cough) through personal or political strife.
